The Strange Case Of Mary Page

"Who is in the syndicate?" "They don't want the names known. They are men pretty high up in politics and I don't mind telling you, in the liquor interests. That sort of fellow loves to take a flyer in the show business, and for once I was Johnnie on the spot." He laughed, and pulled out a cigar. "You don't mind if I smoke, do you? Have one?"

Langdon declined, but produced a box of matches for his visitor.

"I'm very glad, for your sake, that you were," said Langdon drily; then, with a sudden change of tone he leaned across the desk crying harshly, "Has that anything to do with your testimony in court? Was that the real reason you came back to the city?"

"For once I was Johnnie on the spot."

Daniels winced. "That's what I came to see you about," he said bluntly. "I admit I didn't tell everything that I might have on the stand. What I held back may have nothing to do with this case. I held it back," he added significantly, "for several reasons, some of which you may know."

"What I knew or don't know has nothing to do with the matter," retorted Langdon, but with a change of tone. "You haven't answered my question yet."

"I'm not going to answer it," said Daniels after a long pause. "Maybe I'll have to later on, but not now. Only, see here, Langdon, I've got to know one thing; has Mary got the ghost of a chance to get off? Do you think that what's-its-name psycho will get her out of prison? I ain't got weak nerves or anything; but I don't mind saying that this thing has got my goat. For a while I didn't read the papers, but yesterday I did and I found that—that things didn't look as bright for the little girl as I had imagined. It looks, in fact, as if she was up against it hard. As if—unless something is done—she'll go to the chair."

And he calmly puffed his cigar.

"Not 'No,'" cried Langdon with a shudder. "Never that. It won't come to that. I can promise you. They can't prove her guilty, but there are lots of different degrees of murder, and escaping the chair doesn't mean setting her free."

The two men sat silent for a long time, facing each other across the desk, antagonistic, yet linked by some thought that neither would put into words. At last Daniels spoke.

"I'm no snitcher," he said hoarsely. "I don't believe in telling all you know and stirring up a lot of mud when you ain't sure it will do any good. But I'd do a lot for Mary Page. She's on the level. She didn't shoot James Pollock—I'm dead sure of that. And I won't see her harmed if I can stop it, no matter what the price is."

"Thank you," said Langdon, but Daniels frowned.

"You've got no cause to thank me," he said. "I just wanted you to know. I want to be kept posted. I don't want to tell anything that ain't necessary, but if worse comes to the worst I'll tell it all."

"Is that your promise?"

"Yes." Abruptly Daniels put on his hat, and without a word of parting marched out of the door leaving Langdon staring through narrowed lids at his retreating form, as he reached for the telephone.

He was late getting into court, but whatever conflicting emotions the promise made by Daniels had roused in him were hidden by the smiling mask of confidence and ease with which he reassured not only Mary but the spectators.

To Mary, that smile and the deep abiding tenderness in his eyes were the two things that made it possible to bear with patience the weary strain of the passing days. The first shuddering horror of the tragedy had passed. It is true, and in spite of its occasional return in the quiet of sleepless nights, it had given place to a less poignant though bitter enough suffering.

the suffocating sense of being a prisoner; of being denied the fresh air and the sunshine and the right to go where she pleased, seemed almost unbearable.

Yet she knew that the agony of her suffering was doubled by that of Langdon; that he went through vicariously all she endured as well as bearing his own burden, and so for his sake she bore up, drinking in courage from the love that enveloped her whenever his eyes met hers.

For just as the trial and what had gone before it had stripped her of her woman's subtleties and coquetties, so had it stripped Langdon's love of the masculine dread of publicity, and he cared nothing even if all those in the courtroom read the secrets of his heart.

EAST ARLINGTON

The East Arlington Village Improvement Association will not put anything on the road this year to lay the dust. We do not like to hear fault finding, when we were trying to do good. The Calcium chloride they say hurts the road, the oil so many do not want so we will let each one take care of their own dust this year.

The East Arlington Village Improvement Association will give a moving picture show out of doors next Friday night, June 9th down in front of Hale Co., office. The proceeds to fix side walks from the Kelly's crossing toward East Arlington. If every one, who wants a good walk to walk on will walk our way Friday night we will fix the walk so they will want to walk our way when they are out for a walk. Ice cream will be served.

"Fake Remedies" Advertised

No doubt some of the medicines advertised are fakes, but these never have any lasting success. They stand in striking contrast to the good old standard, dependable remedies, like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which has stood the test of time and for more than forty years has been alleviating the suffering of womankind. Such medicines are a blessing to the community and will continue their good work from one generation to another.
